THE MCDONALD MERRILL KETCHAM AWARD

The story of this award and lectureship begins with a visionary alumna of Indiana University: Dorothy M. Ketcham. Miss Ketcham received her bachelor of arts in economics in 1914 and her master of arts in sociology the following year. She joined the faculty of the University of Michigan in 1921. In 1922, she became director of social services at the University of Michigan Hospital. In this capacity, she saw the important role that medicine and law played in the lives of those whom she served. In 1928, she established a multifaceted workshop and recreational facility for children confined to the hospital. While at the university she also wrote several books, two of which are devoted to hospital law. Miss Ketcham's affinity for the law grew out of her family's close relationship with the legal system. Her grandfather, David McDonald, was a practicing attorney in Indianapolis, as well as a circuit judge. He was appointed to the United States District Court in 1864 where he served until his death. Dorothy's father, William A. Ketcham, was a well known Indianapolis attorney. Prior to being admitted to the bar in 1869, he studied law with his father, John L. Ketcham and Judge David McDonald. William Ketcham was elected to the office of state attorney general in 1894 and served two terms. Miss Ketcham's interest in health law extended beyond her scholarship. In a trust she established for herself and four of her sisters (Miss Flora McDonald Ketcham, Dr. Jane M. Ketcham, and Misses Lilla and Lucia Ketcham), she made a remainder gift to the Indiana University Foundation to be used to assist the university in developing programs that would foster a greater understanding and better relations between the professions of law and medicine. Miss Ketcham was especially interested in furthering the careers of young medical and law students and instilling in them an appreciation for both professions. Miss Ketcham's generous gift, named for her grandparents (Judge David McDonald, John L. Ketcham and Jane Merrill Ketcham), funds this prestigious lectureship and award for an individual who has demonstrated excellence in the fields of common interest to the two professions. It is fitting that the university honor Miss Ketcham's wishes by bringing to our campus distinguished scholars and leaders who bridge the gap between law and medicine.

JAMES F. BLUMSTEIN, M.A., L.L.B.

PROFESSOR OF CONSTITUTIONAL LAW & HEALTH LAW AND POLICY, VANDERBILT SCHOOL OF LAW

Professor Blumstein ranks among the nation's most prominent scholars of health law, law and medicine, and voting rights. He is currently one of only five University Professors at Vanderbilt and the first whose second tenured appointment is in the Vanderbilt Medical School. As founder of the Vanderbilt Institute for Public Policy Studies and Director of its Health Policy Center, Professor Blumstein has served as the principal investigator on numerous grants concerning managed care, hospital management, and medical malpractice. His peers have recognized his leadership in health law and policy by electing Professor Blumstein to the Institute of Medicine of the National Academy of Sciences. He received the Vanderbilt University Earl Sutherland Prize, the preeminent University recognition for lifetime scholarly contribution. He has been the Olin Visiting Professor at the University of Pennsylvania Law School and a visiting professor at Duke Law School and Duke's Institute of Policy Sciences and Public Affairs. A dedicated teacher, Professor Blumstein is a past recipient of the Hall-Hartman Teaching Award at Vanderbilt.

Professor Blumstein joined the Vanderbilt law faculty in 1970 and currently serves as University Professor of Constitutional Law and Health Law & Policy. He is published widely in the area of health law. Professor Blumstein received his B.A., M.A., and L.L.B. from Yale University.

WILLIAM S. AND CHRISTINE S. HALL
CENTER FOR LAW AND HEALTH

The Center for Law and Health was established in 1987 to conduct legal and empirical research on health law issues in Indiana and the nation; interpret health law issues for the bar, government, and the health care community; and expand the curriculum and teaching of health law at the law school, while providing opportunities for student participation in Center-sponsored research initiatives, educational programs, and health law internships.

Located in downtown Indianapolis, the Center is near several major pharmaceutical firms, many of the state's leading medical centers, health insurers, and health law firms, and the health agencies of state government. The Center's proximity to these institutions has enabled it to become a major contributor to state and national health law and policy development. The Center is also located on the same campus as the Indiana University Medical Center, Indiana University's health professions schools, and the Indiana University Bioethics Center, resulting in excellent opportunities for interdisciplinary research on health law and policy issues.

Since its inception, the Center has engaged in a sustained program of research and scholarship in the health law and policy field. It has also sought to disseminate its research through publications and educational programs. The work of the Center is continuously developing for the benefit of the law school's student body and the broader health care community.
